now. Its a Brother KH, one of the last Brother models before brother kh881 knitting machine manual electronics were added to the machine. It's a Brother KH881, one of the last Brother models before electronics were added to the machine. Our plan is as follows. This is the first in a series of posts to catalog this journey and maybe make it slightly easier for anyone else that wants to walk the same road. Fabienne is a celebrity in the mathematical community for her successful Kickstarter project KnitYak Custom mathematical knit scarves, in which she obtained an industrial knitting machine to produce a large number unique mathematical scarves based on elementary cellular automata.

For example, this KnitYak scarf was generated by Rule 90, with multiple pixels in the generating row In this video Fabienne's Hacked Knitting Machine Creations!, she explains how she got started While we were there we stopped in a knitting shop that sold beautiful Estonianstyle fair isle scarves and shawls, and in the shop was this curious machine Here's a picture of one of the punchcards that could be fed into this mysterious machine Whatever it is, it seemed like something I could actually maybe figure out how to do. When we returned to the states I consulted the magical internet and figured out how to get one of these machines. The Brother KH881 I ended up getting from eBay is really close to the machine I saw in that Estonian shop. In fact, one of the scarves I bought in that shop turned out to be created using one of the standard Brother punch cards that came with my machine. The knitting machine was shipped to me in two boxes, each with just a few pieces of bubble wrap that were completely popped by the time they got to me. Here's the box of "miscellaneous parts" that was included in the shipment. Oh boy. After going through the parts list carefully I determined that about a third of the things I was shipped were part of the Brother KH881, and the rest were incomprehensible attachments to deal with later. It also turned out that I was missing five or six relatively key pieces, all of which I could order from eBay. There are a HUGE number of videos online that you can watch to get your bearings and to learn how to manage specific problems. Two very good sources of video tutorials are the YouTube videos by June Clark and the YouTube videos by theanswerladyknits. Knitting Couture's video on How to Replace the Sponge Bar helped me through this process, which turned out to be pretty gross The admins have posted lots of videos and documents, and lots of people ask and answer questions every day.

I've learned so much just reading the posts that pop up each day in this group. Along the way I learned that it is possible to impale your thumb on one of the needles and that it is not fun when that happens. This video from Tricotosing about machine knitting twocolor punchcard designs on a Brother KH881 was particularly helpful After knitting you have to "block" or steam the fabric so it won't roll up, but we were too lazy to do that so instead we 3D printed a snaptogether swatch holder to keep the fabric flat. We made them in Tinkercad, so you can also modify them yourself from the public file if you want a different size or style Thanks!
